Rebels 'liberate' Amin's capital

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Tanzanian troops and Ugandan rebels, showered with flowers by civilians, entered Idi Amin's capital in triumph Wednesday after a five-month war to drive the dictator from power.

Residents of Kampala flooded the streets to greet their "liberators," swarming over the Tanzanian tanks, looting shops and beating to death stragglers from Amin's army.

Amin and remnants of his forces were last seen Tuesday fleeing eastward toward Jinja, 50 miles away, in a convoy of limousines. Some reports said he had gone to Tororo, near the Kenyan border.

Townspeople in Jinja reported a flood of wounded and ragged soldiers from Amin's loyal units. Tanzanian and rebel commanders ordered no immediate full-scale push to the east, however.

"The racist fascist is no longer in power!" the rebels declared over Uganda Radio and through loudspeakers in Kampala streets.

The Tanzanian-sponsored Ugandan National Liberation Front quickly announced establishment of a provisional government with former Ugandan university official Yussufu K. Lule as president, defense minister and armed forces chief.

In a broadcast statement from Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, Lule promised a "rule of law" and said Uganda's first elections since 1962 would be held "as soon as conditions permit."

He said he wants to "bring back to the people of Uganda the good life they once knew. There must be no revenge."

For the Tanzanian and exile invaders, the almost bloodless capture of Kampala capped an offensive that began 1 1/2 months and 120 miles ago. The final assault began Tuesday after hours of air, artillery and rocket bombardment.

An American reporter who marched into Kampala with the invaders said many of the Ugandans apparently were caught and beaten to death by civilians.

Among the dead were a U.N. official from West Germany and his wife. Their automobile apparently was struck by a rocket.

Residents who hunkered down in the capital through two weeks of shelling and uncertainty poured out into the open after daybreak Wednesday. But the celebration quickly turned into uncontrolled looting and ransacking of stores and government houses. Tanzanians were unable to quell it.

Amin seized power in 1971 in a military coup that ousted then-President Milton Obote. In the next eight years he methodically crushed his opposition in bloodbaths that drew denunciations from around the world.

Utah senators oppose windfall tax

...tah's two U.S. senators said Tuesday they were in ...r of President Carter's proposed deregulation of ...price of crude oil but were in disagreement with ...r aspects of the president's energy program.

"Deregulation should have been done several years ... and then we wouldn't be in the predicament ...e in now with the Arabs," Sen. Jake Garn, R-..., said.

...tah's senior senator said he did not agree with the ...posed excess profits tax, intended to strip oil com...es of their windfall profits. Garn said he favored ...x that would encourage the oil companies to invest their profits in exploration of new energy sources.

"I would propose a 90 percent tax of profits that were not invested in exploration of new energy sources," Garn said. "Rather than the government taking 50 percent of the profits, I would like to see 90 percent spent in exploration."

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, agreed with Garn. "I am delighted with the deregulation. Until it is done we will not be paying the replacement cost of the energy we are currently using."

But the senator said he did not agree with the rest of the proposed plan. "I don't know how the Democrats in Congress can buy the whole program, because it is not an energy program," he said.

Hatch said the reason he objected to the plan was that it provided no way for exploration of new energy. The senator said he supports a measure similar to Garn's, in which oil companies would be encouraged to invest their profits in exploration.

Both senators felt the nuclear accident at Three Mile Island, Penn., would have an effect on the energy proposal.

"I think the incident should be in the favor of the nuclear industry," Garn said. "Safety regulations will be tightened as a result of the accident and the industry will be more safe."

Four to receive honorary degrees

Four persons will be awarded honorary doctoral degrees at the 104th Commencement Exercises at Brigham Young University April 20.

BYU President Dallin H. Oaks announced that Dr. Nyle C. Brady, internationally known agronomist, will receive an honorary Doctor of Science degree; Elder Gordon B. Hinckley, a member of the Council of the Twelve of the LDS Church, will receive a Doctor of Humanities degree; Dr. Edward H. Levi, former U.S. Attorney General, an honorary Doctor of Laws degree; and Dr. Eugene A. Nida, long-time executive secretary of the American Bible Society, an honorary Doctor of Religious Literature degree.

The four degrees will be conferred in ceremonies beginning at 9:30 a.m. in the Marriott Center. Elder Hinckley will deliver the Commencement address.

The processional will begin at 8:45 a.m. in front of the Administration Building.

Dr. Brady is a native of Manassa, Colo., and a 1941 graduate of BYU. Since 1965, he has been director of research and director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, New York State College of Agriculture, at Cornell University.

He joined the Cornell faculty in 1947 after receiving his Ph.D. in agronomy at North Carolina State College. At Cornell he taught soil science, was active in agricultural research, and later became head of the Agronomy Department.

After serving one year as assistant to the director of agricultural relations for the Tennessee Valley Authority, Dr. Brady was appointed director of science and education for the U.S. Department of Agriculture. He has been interested in increasing agricultural productivity, especially of Asian lands.

Provo airport: alive and growing

"We have a sleeping giant down ...e," said J. Earl Wignall, Provo city ...missioner.

"...e three-runway airport is capable ...nding aircraft up to the size of a ...ll version of the 727 under instru...t conditions, according to Mike ...e, manager of Central Utah Avia...

"The time will come when it will be ...ajor facility with enough manage...t demands and problems that it ...be an office in itself," said Jerry Howell, director of community development. "If funding allows, we will be hiring a full time airport manager in the next fiscal year."

The airport was placed under the community development office in 1972 "because of the promotional needs it had," Howell said. "The city commission felt we (community development) were well versed in promotion and grantsmanship and the airport badly needed improvements."

From 1968 to 1974, the airport applied for no federal funding and was basically "in a lull," according to Dave Gunn, airport manager.

Since coming under community development supervision, several major projects have already been completed with the help of federal funding.

"First priority for the future is to get our ILS (instrument landing system) in," Gunn said. "We've been working to get one in for a couple of years now."

The landing system, which would cost approximately $180,000, "would enable planes to come in under lower weather conditions," said to Dick Nye, manager of Provo Aviation.

Pre-application to the FAA, consisting of engineering and site preparation for an ILS, is estimated at a cost of $75,000. The FAA would supply approximately 80 percent of the pre-application funding and 75 percent of

Homosexuality: 'Change possible'

Editor's note: This is the final in a three-part series on homosexuals at BYU. Universe Graduate Assistant Barbara Murphy, Assistant News Editor Alice Tate, News Editor David Long and reporter Joseph Walker interviewed a cross section of BYU homosexuals and several university and church officials, as well as psychologists and other experts on the subject. Some names of homosexuals in the series are fictitious to protect their identities.

The road a homosexual must walk in order to overcome the problem is a long, difficult one. Many homosexuals feel it is a road they must walk alone.

"The only people who understand me and accept me are other gays," said one BYU student. "My bishop would just excommunicate me, and my parents would disown me."

But there are many who are willing to walk with the homosexual in his journey.

Harold Brown, LDS Church commissioner of Social Services, said, "The greatest concern I have is that people with problems will be afraid or unwilling to go to their bishops, or come to us, when we all want so much to help. We believe it's important for a person with problems to work with his bishop, and LDS Social Services will assist as called upon."

Dr. Maxine Murdock, licensed psychologist for the BYU Counseling Center, said, "I am firmly convinced people can change," but in order to be successful in making the change, the person must be highly motivated.

"I have had people tell me it's just too hard," she said. "I don't tell them it will be easy. It's painful and it is hard work. I tell people you will have to go against how you feel in choosing your behavior — but it can be done."

Jim, a junior at BYU, refers to himself as someone who's been cured. "I did not ever consider myself a homosexual," he said. "I was just seeking to satisfy an inward desire for affection that was lacking from both my parents."

This desire led to homosexual experiences for Jim, and eventually he went to a branch president for help. Overcoming the problem through repentance was not easy, Jim said. "My branch president said I had not really suffered to recompence for those acts," he said. "So I went through hell.

"I still crave male affection," said the father of two, "but it's for the normal reason — to have a buddy. I have absolutely no desires to have any sexual relations with any guys."

Dr. Murdock, who works with homosexuals, said some come to her on their own; some are referred by their bishops; but "more come because of referrals by others I have counseled."

Dr. Murdock said she doesn't keep a file on her cases. "We're very careful not to have anything in writing on these people. My desire is to help people." She emphasized that BYU's Counseling Center has "privileged communication and the university supports us in it.

"Most of the students I see are very uncomfortable with their feelings," she said. In fact, the majority are "motivated and concerned and want to change.

"I have worked with some who have absolutely no desire to change," she said. "I suggest to them that they might be happier somewhere else." Either way, she said she tries to help them make their own decision. For those who don't want to change, she lets them know that if at a later date they find they don't like their lifestyle, "they can always change."

Dr. Murdock tells of a BYU coed, living with another woman who was not a student, who came to her for counseling. After discussing the situation, the coed indicated she did not want to change her lifestyle and Dr. Murdock suggested BYU may not be the best place for the two to stay. The women, both LDS, asked to be excommunicated from the church and the coed left school.

Months later, the former student called BYU Counseling Center and told Dr. Murdock that "life was a bore." "They thought they had made the decision that would bring ultimate happiness, but it didn't," Dr. Murdock said.

Dr. Allen E. Bergin, BYU professor of psychology who is conducting research on the problem with the BYU Values Institute, said the homosexual's attitude is one of the most crucial factors in rehabilitation.

"Homosexuals need to realize that change is possible and there are loving people in the church who can help them."

"The desire to change is the real key," he said. "If the homosexual has the desire, it's almost like conversion. Then their struggle is all worthwhile. Most active LDS have the desire to change."

One active LDS member, a former homosexual, writes, "My main regret is all the years I wasted, listening to the pap and drivel that the world is so full of in regards to homosexuality, and I'm grateful that I found in the church a positive strong and effective way."

All agree the road is rough. "It takes more than one or two sessions," Dr. Murdock said. "It is a long-term thing. You have to go against how you feel as you change your behavior."

Some who have undergone counseling find it difficult to understand why they have the feelings they do. One homosexual said of his sessions, "We have just gone around in circles. I tried to do what they said but it didn't work for me. I still had the feelings."

Elder Boyd K. Packer of the LDS Council of the Twelve said in a BYU 12-Stake Fireside last year: "With physical ailments we always want a quick cure. If a prescription doesn't work by sundown, we want to get another one.

"For this ailment (homosexuality) there is no other prescription that I know about," he said. "You will have to grow away from your problem with undeviating determination. The longer you have been afflicted, or the more deeply you have been involved, the more difficult and the longer the cure."

A Values Institute report states: "They (homosexuals who have undergone treatment) do not say that the old thoughts never return. But they testify of growing strength as their thoughts and behavior become righteous. Like all people, they always must be on guard against that which is their personal temptation."

Although LDS Church leaders say a cured homosexual can eventually enjoy a normal heterosexual relationship, counseling homosexuals to marry is not considered an effective curing method.

Dr. Victor Brown Jr., director of the BYU Values Institute, said, "Marriage can be destructive to the homosexual. His problem is not sexual; it's emotional. Throwing him into a heterosexual relationship with the hope that a proper sexual experience will cure him is simply not the answer. The problem must be dealt with before marriage can be considered. I'm a bishop myself, and I like to think most bishops realize the fallacy of such advice.

"But after the problem is dealt with," Brown said, "there is no reason why the individual cannot enjoy a perfectly normal, healthy marriage relationship."

Bergin said counseling homosexuals is one of the most difficult challenges a church leader faces. "Sometimes a bishop is horrified when confronted with the problem," he said. "They don't know what to tell them and too often the homosexual feels rejected.

"Homosexuals need to realize that change is possible and there are loving people in the church who can help them," he said. "We need to be careful not to drive them into the arms of the gay world by being condescending."

Several local bishops agreed that homosexuality is one of the most challenging and disturbing problems they deal with — one they cannot handle alone.

"I was kind of flustered when a fellow came to me with the problem this year," said the bishop of a BYU single student ward. "I had never dealt with it before, and I wasn't quite sure what to do. I just tried to give him some Gospel love and understand him, and do all that I could to help him."

Another local bishop said, "I found that my lack of training in treating

Iran executes 11 more leaders

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Firing squads shot 11 generals, diplomats and politicians on Wednesday — the highest execution toll in the capital in one night.

The latest executions in Tehran pushed to at least 101 the number of men put to death since the revolutionary forces of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini took over two months ago.

More trials were reported in progress Wednesday, including those of three police officers suspected of torture.

Tornadoes kill at least 56

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Emergency crews strung lifelines Wednesday to splintered neighborhoods in this north Texas city and three other "Tornado Alley" towns hit by tornadoes that killed at least 56 persons and injured more than 800 others.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements took to the air to survey the damage left by Tuesday's killer twisters and said the cost to rebuild would run between $200 million and $300 million.

The Department of Public Safety reported 41 bodies had been found in Wichita Falls by noon, plus 11 in Vernon and one in Harrold, a few miles to the west. Across the Red River in Lawton, Okla., three more were counted dead.

"They're just piled up out there," said Kenneth Hill, mayor of Wichita Falls, a city of 96,000. "We know there's got to be more bodies out there. I wouldn't be surprised if we had 100 dead in the final count."

Teamsters pact ends strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration proclaimed victory Wednesday for its stretched anti-inflation guidelines after the Teamsters union accepted a contract settlement to end a 10-day nationwide trucking shutdown.

Union and trucking industry bargainers announced tentative agreement late Tuesday on a contract industry officials said would boost labor costs by about 30 percent over three years — or just over 9 percent a year compounded.

But administration officials disputed that cost estimate, saying the contract boosts wages and fringe benefits by 26.5 percent over three years, according to their calculations. After subtracting several increases exempt from the guidelines, the administration said the Teamsters were in compliance with the program.

Holiday travel to prove costly

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans making traditional trips to visit relatives at Easter will pay more than ever for the gasoline they need to get there, and in some parts of the nation, they may have trouble buying it for any price.

An Associated Press spot check around the nation showed on Wednesday that gasoline prices continue to rise rapidly, the result of higher costs for imported oil, tight supplies and new government regulations.

And while the $1-a-gallon level has not yet been reached, one New York City gas station nudged its price right up to it.

cost of the actual ILS funding if approved.

Another item high on the airport's priority list is a terminal area. "We are desperately in need of a terminal," said Jense, who is a member of the state aeronautics board. "But funding is extremely tight."

Before the terminal can become a reality, an "area layout plan" is necessary, Gunn said. "We may have to move some buildings to resolve congestion problems."

Another item planned for the next fiscal year is to compile an environmental impact statement on the effects of extending the main runway. The runway is currently 7,100 feet long and is planned to be extended to 8,600 feet. Such an extension would allow the airport to carry 60 percent of the basic transport aircraft fleet, carrying 90 percent of the useful modes, Gunn said.

"We've budgeted the city's matching share," Gunn said, federal funding is now necessary before the $270,000 environmental study can be completed.

Another major project planned for the the future is to complete a drainage study and then build a road dike which would provide access to the airport and also reclaim existing lands for development.

The waters of Utah Lake have receded, making more land available for development. The ownership of this property, called accretion land, has not yet been resolved but when the moratorium on development is lifted and ownership is determined, the potentials for the land are great, according to Gunn.

"It would be hard to build anything of substance there without diking," said Dave Gardner, city zoning administrator. "There are solutions to the problem, but they are very expensive. The solutions are still very tenuous."

Another possibility in the future of the airport is for it to become a back-up airport to Salt Lake City International. "There's always that possibility, but there's no push to develop a back-up airport now," Ashbaker said. "But tomorrow, if we were forced to develop a major reliever for Salt Lake, Provo would be a prime candidate."

"For general aviation, we may take some of the work load from Salt Lake, but they're the only major airline stop in Utah in the forseeable future," according to Jense.

The completion of Heritage Mountain ski resort may heighten the pressure for expansion at the airport. "A ski resort of course will be a big factor to accommodate and be ready for," Gunn said. "It could be a component of tremendous growth."

One problem which may influence the kind of expansion the airport experiences, is the availablilty of fuel. "How much fuel we have is entering into the picture," Jense said. "It's a real problem — it's not just talked about.

Funding, fuel, and other contingencies may mean that no one is quite sure exactly what the future holds for Provo Municipal Airport, but if the trend continues, it is certain that expansion is on the way.

Homosexuality: 'Change possible'

exuals was really not much of a n. Social services took care of f the counseling and treatment. needed from me was support couragement."

ord McBride, a psychologist at nogos Community Mental Center, said, "I think it is ap- ate for young people with this n to go to their ecclesiastical first. Most bishops realize that a problem they are not equipped dle themselves, but they can be aluable source of security and t."

gin said a combination of al counseling with first-rate ional counseling is the key to the homosexual.

Charles Madsen, a psychologist lida State University who serves unselor in a stake presidency, he has had close to 100 percent s in curing homosexuals when ning spiritual and professional ling.

old Brown said, "Somehow, the xual has got to have hope and hat the church cares very much n. They have to believe that the church only wants to assist them in overcoming the problems they face."

Dr. Murdock said she always encourages students to let her know how they are doing. "I routinely give them my home phone number and I get calls in the middle of the night from people saying, 'Hey, I can't handle it,' and we talk."

Help offered by LDS Church Social Services focuses on three main areas of rehabilitation.

"The first thing we do, that we think is extremely important, is to accept the individual as a person of worth," Harold Brown said. "Each individual is valuable, and they need to know it."

Social services also tries to provide hope by assisting the bishops and the individuals who need help, the commissioner said.

Finally, support is provided to help the individual through the repentance process. Friends, family and local church leaders are involved in loving support, so the individual does not face the "battle" alone.

Also included in this support is extensive counseling for the homosexual on dealing with the problem. Brown indicated that each case receives highly individualized consideration. Most homosexuals are trained in impulse management. Others are advised to get out of an environment which may compound the problem.

"When individuals are referred to LDS Social Services for help, all are counseled in a very personalized, concerned, professional manner," Brown said. "But the most important thing they learn from us is that we care and that we understand."

For those who have yet to seek counsel, Brown added, "Before someone starts calling himself a homosexual, he'd better find out what it is he is feeling." He said some individuals come to social services claiming to be homosexual because they enjoy companionship with other men, when what they really are feeling is a natural love for another individual.

If it is determined that a person has a homosexual problem, Brown indicated that the person should seek help, but cautioned, "A person should choose help very carefully. He should choose someone who is competent and qualified. An LDS person should seek help from individuals whose values are consistent with the eternal truths of the Gospel. The bishop is always a good place to start."

Elder Packer said, "Overcoming moral temptation is a very private battle, an internal battle. There are many around you who want to help and who can help.... But do not start with them. Others can lend moral support and help establish an environment for your protection. But this is an individual battle."

To those who do not have a homosexual problem, but who may know of people who do, Harold Brown indicated that "pure religion" dictates we continue to love and understand individuals in spite of personal weaknesses.

Jim agrees. "We have a lot of people at BYU who can be steered away from homosexual activity if brotherly love is offered in a wholesome environment," he said.

"To me, it is the height of hypocracy to call ourselves true Christians and then look down our noses at people with homosexual problems," Brown said. "We need to reach out to them with love, compassion, friendship and caring, and let them know there is a place for them."

Planning Commission scrutinizes development

By NANCY BENAC
Universe Staff Writer

Careful scrutiny of proposals by developers was made by the Provo Planning Commission Wednesday night. Several proposals were turned down, while others were approved with stipulations.

Concerns about drainage problems and land movement characterized the hearing to grant preliminary subdivision approval to 33 lots known as Rolling Knolls Subdivision. The lots, located at approximately 300 North Foothill Drive, would be located over an earthquake fault.

"We know there is a fault line all across the east foothills," said Jack Zerbes, city engineer. "So it's important to develop areas like this without allowing the potential for sliding."

Possible drainage problems caused by the increased run-off were also discussed. "We're concerned about the possibility of flooding caused by additional drainage of surface water," said Keith Roos, a resident of the surrounding area.

Final approval was given for the subdivision with stipulations for proper drainage and that property buyers be notified the lots they purchase have a fault running across the back of them.

A request was also made for rezoning of property located at approximately 1200 North and 1550 East from the existing A-1-40 (agricutural) zone to an R-1-10 (single family residential) zone.

"We'd like you to consider allowing building under new provisions," said David Draper, of Natures Estates, representing Resource Dynamics. "We propose building permits be given to those lots that do conform and other lots be red tagged until it can be shown that homes can be built without any aggressive grading."

The commission voted to deny the zoning change for the high slope area, acting on recommendations from the city staff. "We feel strongly that a proper grading plan with half as many lots — when we know they'd all be buildable — would be much better," said Zerbes.

The commission also voted to approve a proposed site development ordinance. The ordinance requires that prior to issuance of a building permit, all hillside lots (defined as lots with over 10 percent slope) have a registered grading plan approved by city officials.

"This actually formalizes existing city policy," said Neil Lindberg, city planner. "It will preserve the integrity of lots and place the responsibility on the individual property owners."

International intern to work in Europe

A BYU Communications student has been selected to serve as the department's first international intern.

The Communications Department selected Don Harrison, a communications junior from Salt Lake City, to go on an internship in Switzerland. Harrison will begin his assignment with Valser St. Peters Cuelle, a major mineral water producer and distributor.

After seven weeks with the company, Harrison will work with a major Swiss advertising agency which serves the mineral water company.

Harrison served a mission in Hamburg, Germany. He currently works at the Missionary Training Center.

Initial contact for the overseas experience was made by Dr. George Barrus, advertising instructor in the communications department. Barrus said he will be going on a Paris Semester Abroad program in January 1980 and will make additional contacts in the major business centers of Europe to determine the feasibility of large scale internships in the future.

"There are some interesting possibilities for such a program not only in Europe but South America and the Far East," Barrus said.

Reprints of speech ready

Masters theses

Students try 'creative' touch

By DIANNA GREER
Universe Staff Writer

"When I was a little boy I always wanted to write a play," said English graduate student Don McDermott. "I guess it all started in the third grade when I wrote one called 'The Fall of the Alamo.' "

McDermott, who recently finished a three act play, is one of three BYU students to complete a thesis in creative writing this year.

McDERMOTT

McDermott, Karen Moloney and Bruce Lee have completed theses in three different areas of creative writing, and will receive Masters of Arts degrees at April graduation.

McDermott said writing a creative thesis was a great opportunity.

"I'm sure I learned to write as well or better by doing this rather than a research thesis," Lee said.

Lee said there are usually one to two creative theses each year. He said the creative portion of the thesis option is not promoted or encouraged by teachers at BYU, but the three chose to do it anyway.

"We had to submit some of our work first, so they could see we had enough talent to go ahead with our projects," said Miss Moloney.

She presented a thesis in poetry entitled "A Milesian Tel in Southern California."

"Milesius was the legendery father of the Irish race, which originally came from Israel," explained Miss Moloney. She is one half Irish, and from the tribe of Ephraim, thus the relation.

"In my thesis, I am the tel (an archaeological site), that I'm excavating. My poems are my artifacts, and the thesis is my site report. I dig both wide and deep," she continued. "The breadth is my travels and my downward dig is my own history."

She said her last group of poems are the most important. "I start with my childhood, continue with how I fit in as a convert to the church, and then how it all fits in with my Irish Catholic heritage. It's a kind of coming to terms with an identity."

Miss Moloney said she also began her writing in the third grade, but most of the poetry for her thesis (about 55 poems), has been written in the past four years.

"A Miracle Play," McDermott's project, is a medieval period piece. "It's a closet drama which deals with the complexities of faith during the middle ages," he said.

McDermott said his play took three or four years to write. "There were eight to nine rewrites involved," he said.

Lee spent two years writing a novelette for his thesis. " 'Rainfell,' the story of a young man who rejects the morals and ideas of society, evolved from a short story," Lee said.

"We're all very happy that we were given the creative option," said McDermott, "but I wish the university would get behind creative writers more."

Lee said, "This is the place it seems you would look for 'the great Mormon writer,' but creative students aren't given much help or encouragement at BYU."

All three students said they'd like to see the university give student writers more help in getting published.

Y graduates named interns

Four BYU graduates have been named Presidential Management Interns and a fifth has been chosen as an alternate, the United States Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has announced.

The five were among 800 applicants from throughout the nation, and the number chosen from BYU's School of Management was high considering the number of possible candidates —about 100 — from the university. One prestigious California school with more than 1,500 graduate management students, for example, received 15 internships.

WINTCH

The four BYU students chosen for the federal Executive Branch program are: Randall M. Christopherson of Tigard, Ore.; Marta D. Clark of Fortuna, Calif.; Michael A. Graham of Provo; and Mary L. Wintch of Manti.

Donald M. Terry of Menlo Park, Calif., was chosen as an alternate; he will be an intern if a slot becomes open in the OPM program. Every year many of the alternates are offered internships.

All five are honors students, and all of them will be receiving master's of public administration degrees this year.

Christopherson is a former administrative assistant to the director of the Institute of Government Management Assessment Workshop and Personal Development Seminar programs. He has been a consultant to the director of Oregon's Department of Human Resources and has been regional sales manager for a California soft drink firm.

Miss Clark has served as a planning analyst with the Bureau of Health Planning for Wisconsin's State Division of Health. She has also been a systems analyst for Humboldt County (California) Planning and Public Health, as well as a research liaison for the West Coast Cancer Foundation of San Francisco.

Graham is an administrative assistant at the Latter-day Saint Hospital in Salt Lake City. He has also been an IGS administrative assistant and administrative aide to Utah State Sen. Karl N. Snow. An Army veteran, he was a paratroop company commander.

Miss Wintch, executive director of the MPA Association at BYU, has been a legislative research intern and an art instructor for three years at Kaysville Junior High School.

Terry was an intern with the Weber County personnel department in 1978. Also an Army veteran, he was a captain in the infantry.

Boy saves life by scaring gators

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Eight-year-old Willie Jenkins, who cannot swim, clung to a cushion for 12 hours, splashing to scare away alligators as he floated down a river after a nighttime boating accident.

Before the accident, Willie's grandfather had told him what to do in just such a case.

"He said his Poppy had told him before that if anything ever happened, to always hold on to a life preserver until help came," said the boy's uncle, Claude Watson.

Police rescued Willie Tuesday morning. Drifting 200 yards away was the body of his grandfather, Robert Watson, 56. He apparently drowned when their fishing boat turned over.

Jefferson County Sheriff James Scott said the youngster apparently was not injured.

"He was not suffering much from exposure, but he was very shook up when we told him about his grandfather," the sheriff said.

Scott said Watson, his wife, Eloise, and their grandson camped at the head of the Wacissa River in northern Florida Monday night. Willie and Watson went fishing for catfish, returned to camp, then set out again.

They 'wouldn't wish it on anyone'

By MARGARET WILSON
& FRANK RIGBY
Universe Staff Writers

ampus, Donna Putnam looks like any other t. She is a senior majoring in broadcasting and part time in the Harold B. Lee Library. Still, tot like most students. She is divorced and try- support two children while going to school.

larly, a young man on campus resembles any nard working returned missionary. He is a in international relations preparing to te later this month. But he too is different. At s young man, whom we will call John Smith e he wishes that his name be withheld, is going h a temple divorce with his wife whom he lived ss than a year.

are two of many divorced people in the BYU nity; two people who had dreams of a perfect ge only to see it fail.

t is it like to be divorced at BYU? Do divorced have special problems in adjusting to a e different than that of married and single ? Do friends and acquaintances treat them dif- y because of their divorce?

ess the biggest thing my divorce did to me is on my enthusiasm," Smith said. "With my eem at such a low ebb, I found it was less at- e to do things I knew were right, like praying, tance.

en though I realized I should be praying and at- g my church meetings regularly, I had no ition. Realizing what you should do and doing wo different things. My spiritual edge was cer- dull."

Self-esteem low

search for self-esteem is the most difficult m for divorced people to overcome. Margaret associate professor of child development and relations and counselor at the marriage and counseling clinic, said most divorced people ough a loss of self-esteem and a discounting of bilities.

"They'll try to do a lot to prove themselves. They have a fear that they'll never be able to right a wrong," Ms. Hoops said.

For Ms. Putnam, another struggle is to complete her education while trying to support her two children.

"Women should get their education before they get married. You never know when you might need it," Ms. Putnam said.

The BYU community, with its emphasis on marriage and family, can be both a help and a hindrance to divorced people.

Smith says in most ways being divorced at BYU has been a trying experience. "I get reactions like, 'Oh man, you were married in the temple and now you are getting divorced?' One of the hardest things for me is the feeling that I disappointed my friends," Smith said.

Family emphasis

He also finds it hard with most of the church programs such as family home evening and priesthood geared toward temple marriage. "Even the jokes around campus center on getting engaged or married," Smith said.

"But the Latter-day Saints really know the principle of forgiveness. They are willing to overlook the mark and still believe you are a worthwhile person inside."

Ms. Putnam finds most people accept her situation but are not as sympathetic as she feels they should be. "The people in my ward have been good to me, but they haven't been totally sensitive. I think people in my position don't get the emotional support from the church and friends they need."

"A lot of people don't know how to approach me since they haven't seen many divorced people before. Still, working with people is getting easier since more divorced people are around these days," Ms. Putnam said.

Because divorce divides two people who were previously working together on finances, getting enough money to survive is difficult. Ms. Hoops said marriage counseling statistics show that a divorce usually results in a lower standard of living for the entire family.

Ms. Putnam, for example, said she receives $200 a month in public assistance from the state to help support her two children. She receives other assistance from grants and scholarships, but she still cannot bring in enough money from her part-time job to adequately support her family.

Smith said his divorce has left him traveling around on his bicycle, which is one of the few possessions he retained after the separation. "My ex-wife earns more money than I do and still it is required I pay alimony," Smith said. "This is really trying on my limited budget."

Children suffer

Although no one benefits from divorce, children seem to suffer the most. Ms. Putnam says her two sons, Ephraim, 8, and Sam, 6, encounter special problems.

"The pressure on the children is greater in some ways than on me. They don't understand what's really happening. With me in school, the kids have to conform their lives to my goals and spend long hours waiting for me to finish classes," she said.

She said the kids have few close friends and tend to be more hyperactive than most children around them.

"It's hard playing both parental roles for a child. I have to be stern in one role and loving in another. The kids need the discipline both parents can give."

Smith, whose only child is living with his ex-wife in California, isn't faced with the responsibility of raising children like Ms. Putnam. Instead, he is attempting to live a normal dating life as a single male in Provo.

"When I meet a young lady I would like to date, I first spend time getting to know her better in a non-date situation," Smith said.

"Unless the girl knows already, I don't tell her I'm divorced. I see no reason to at first because that will only cause her to jump to conclusions. But, if I see a dating relationship developing, I definitely tell her.

"Unfortunately, my dating life hasn't been too successful," he said. "One girl I was seeing was able to handle it for a while, but then decided to end our relationship. Another girl told me to 'get lost' after I told her I was divorced."

So how does a divorced person adjust to life at BYU? Ms. Hoops said divorced people have to admit to themselves that they are divorced and then move on from there. She said they have to give up the dream that their marriage was going to be perfect and try to remove the relationship from their lives.

Mourning period

"They have to go through a mourning period just as if the spouse had died. While in mourning they feel all the sorrow of having a marriage fail and then eventually they resolve to go on without the relationship," she said.

"Usually, it takes about three to five years for a divorced person to recover completely from the former marriage."

To help people make the adjustment, the Marriage and Family Counseling Clinic developed 'divorce adjustment groups.' The groups are designed to help divorced people learn their support systems and then use them, Ms. Hoops said.

"They meet in groups of six or seven with two mediators. Through talking things out, divorced people learn to use the support they have to make commitments. It's not designed to solve their problems, but help them learn to give and receive help.

"I can't say I learned a lesson from my divorce," Smith said. "I know I wouldn't wish it on anyone. I am recovering, but it is a long, hard process."

Plaque to honor Curtis

A plaque honoring the late Lyle H. Curtis, director of the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center for 25 years, will be unveiled on the fourth floor, ELWC, Friday.

The fourth floor will be named in Curtis's honor during the ceremony, which will be at 1:30 p.m.

BYU President Dallin H. Oaks will speak, and ASBYU President Perry Bratt will unveil the plaque.

"This recognition comes from the studentbody of BYU," Bratt said Wednesday, "in remembrance of Brother Curtis's great contribution to BYU and student life."

Curtis served as vice president in charge of catering at the Marriott Corporation before coming to BYU in 1960 during the planning stages of the Wilkinson Center. At his death he was the center's director, assistant dean of student life and director of auxiliary services.

It's better in Las Vegas...

BROOKLYN, Ohio (APP) — Brooklyn's commuting councilman has resigned.

For five months, Ronald Hasman commuted 2,100 miles between his new Las Vegas, Nev., bartending job and this Cleveland suburb, where he had been a councilman for the past six years.

On Monday night, Hasmann, 25, submitted his resignation to the council. He said he has decided to stay in Las Vegas and might even run for city council there.

'Jazz' to move to SLC

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The New Orleans Jazz, beset by booking hassles in the Superdome, announced a surprise plan Wednesday to move to Salt Lake City next season if the National Basketball Association approves.

Team owners said they will meet Thursday in New York with NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien to discuss moving the 5-year-old franchise, which finished this season with a 26-56 record, worst in the NBA.

O'Brien refused to comment when contacted in New York.

The move to Utah, where the team would play in the 12,000-seat Salt Palace, must first be approved by 17 of the 24 NBA team owners.

Jazz owners said they are "dead serious" about moving.

But in New Orleans, officials raised questions about several possible problems which must be solved before a move could be made.

Tony Messina, lawyer for Hyatt Management Corp. which manages the Superdome, said the Jazz has six more years on its lease with the Dome although he was not sure of the terms or how much it would cost to buy it out.

"They are acting as if there is no lease at all," he said. "It's not something you can just walk away from. It's something the state and Hyatt will have to enter into together, since they're both parties to the lease."

Denzil Skinner, head of Hyatt Management, was out of country and could not be reached for comment.

Charles Roemer, the state commissioner of administration and former head of the Superdome Commission, could not be reached.

Mayor Ernest Morial, saying he'll do everything he can to keep the Jazz in New Orleans, called for Skinner and team officials to meet with him to talk about what was wrong.

"The Jazz has the greatest playing arena in the nation," Morial said. "The Jazz has set attendance records on a number of occasions. Considering the fact that the Jazz has never reached the playoffs, I think the support this area has shown for professional basketball has been outstanding."

However, a team spokesman noted there is a difference between crowds in the Superdome and in other, smaller arenas where tickets are more expensive.

"We have the lowest ticket price in basketball," said Dave Fredman, the team's public relations man. "Out there, the Salt Palace has only 12,000 seats, so the tickets would be scaled differently. There could be a much higher gross."

In the dome, a massive arena in which some seats are rolled across the football field for courtside, maximum seating is described as 47,200. The biggest crowd was 35,000.

The dome has been described as the only NBA court with leftfield bleachers — the high galleries, where tickets cost $2. The most expensive tickets were $8.50.

Tom Willingham, vice president of business operations, was asked whether the team would still recommend a move if the Dome came up with suitable dates.

"I think that's moot," he said.

"We're convinced it's a good move for us," said Larry G. Hatfield, one of the team's three major partners. He said he expects no opposition from the NBA.

Hatfield announced that the Salt Lake Area Chamber of Commerce would be launching a season ticket sales campaign within the next few weeks. He said he hoped the NBA board would meet to discuss the matter within the next four to six weeks.

Chamber President Wendell Ashton said the chamber enthusiastically supports the move to Salt Lake City. He said the Jazz is a "good, solid franchise with a good financial structure."

"It's not our desire to stay" in New Orleans because of poor booking arrangements in the Superdome, said Sam Battistone, Jazz president and chief executive of Sambo's Restaurants.

He said the club must compete with the Mardi Gras and numerous conventions in scheduling home games in the Superdome.

The best schedule the Jazz could work out with the Superdome for next season would deny the team use of the facility for up to five weeks at a time — a situation Battistone said would be "extremely detrimental."

"We don't see the situation getting any better," said Hatfield.

The franchise's average attendance was less than 9,000 per game in the Superdome this season. It averaged 12,000 and set NBA attendance records with up to 34,000 in the arena during the 1977-78 season.

Battistone said the team name would be changed, but none has been selected. Ashton said he hoped the team would be called the "Saints." Ashton is publisher of the Deseret News, owned by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, of which Battistone is a member.

Hatfield said Jazz superstar Pete Maravich, who was recovering from knee surgery all this season, would be back in action next year. A new general manager would be hired for the club, Hatfield said.

Asked if coach Elgin Baylor would be retained, he said that would be a decison for the new general manager.

Utah has had a Western Basketball Association team, the Utah Pros, for one season. The Pros played their home games in the Salt Palace. Bill Maxwell, general manager of the minor league team, was unavailable for comment.

The Utah Stars of the defunct American Basketball Association folded in 1975. Battistone said the Stars had good fan support, an important consideration in deciding to move to Salt Lake City.

The Jazz, in the Central Division of the NBA's Eastern Conference, had its best season in 1977-78, missing a playoff berth by one game. However, the team has never finished better than .500.

Bird's price? high in the sky

BOSTON (AP) — Indiana State star Larry Bird apparently wants to be the highest paid player in the National Basketball Association history, asking a $6 million, six-year contract from the Boston Celtics.

The opening salvo in the contract talks was fired Tuesday by Bird's Boston-based agent, Bob Woolf, who met for three hours with Celtics President Red Auerbach.

The team made a counter offer, believed to be about $500,000 per year, but Auerbach wouldn't comment. He did say the two sides "are apart," while Woolf termed the gap "substantial."

Both sides say Bird wants a six-year contract, and talks will resume Thursday.

Woolf would neither confirm nor deny a request for $1 million per year.

Kite, Aguilar pick Y

BYU announced Wednesday that high school All-American Greg Kite and guard Pete Aguilar have signed letters of intent to play for the Cougars next season.

Kite, one of the top centers in the nation, announced a week ago his intentions of signing with the Cougars. The 6-11 center said there were numerous reasons for coming to BYU.

"I picked BYU over Duke and the other schools because of a combination of things," Kite said. "The Cougars have a great basketball program under Frank Arnold." He had considered BYU, Duke, UCLA and Kentucky.

Kite, who averaged 17.8 points a game his senior year at Madison High School in Houston, Texas, played in the Texas All-Star game, the Dapper Dan Classic, the McDonald's All America in Washington, D.C., and the McDonald's Classic.

Aguilar was the all-time leading scorer at Evander-Childs High School in Bronx, N.Y. The 6-5 guard-forward, averaged more than 21 points a game his three final years in high school, including a 29 point average his senior year. Along with being voted the MVP in the Thanksgiving Classic in New York, Aguilar was first team all-city in New York.

Jim Reed demonstrates the form which helped him roll 14 strikes in a row. Reed bowled a 300 game while in the Wilkinson games center.

Bowler tops odds hits 300

655,000 to one

According to one reference source, those are the odds of any male bowler rolling a perfect game.

Friday, Jim Reed rolled 14 straight strikes to defy those odds — becoming one of the select few who will bowl perfect games this year.

According to Shafter Bown, Wilkinson Center Games manager, Reed was "just bowling" when he recorded his 300 pin game. Bown added that Reed finished the afternoon with a 744 pin three-game series.

Reed, a junior from Spokane, Wash., is a three-year bowling veteran and, according to Bown, the BYU bowling team coach, Reed has shown interest in bowling ... the Cougars next year. Reed actually had intended to bowl for the BYU team this season but difficulties in his schedule prevented him from making the team's practice sessions.

Aztecs edge Y by one

By CARL HAUPT
Assistant Sports Editor

In a game filled with homeruns, a parade of pitchers, and 28 hits, San Diego State defeated BYU 12-11 to sweep a two game series with the Cougars.

The game got off to a quick start when SDSU's Tony Gwynn slammed a homerun in the first inning to get the Aztecs off to an early lead. The first inning was deceptive, as BYU pitcher John Bottorff struck out three Aztecs in the opening stanza but momentarily lost his touch with Gwynn's homerun. The Cougars tied the score at 1-1 in the bottom of the first inning but then watched as SDSU came back in the second inning to score three more runs and take a commanding lead.

San Diego State used eight pitchers in the three and a half hour contest, while the Cougars used three of their hurlers. Bud Black was the winning pitcher for the Aztecs while Rob Blyth of BYU was in the loser's role.

The Cougars managed to close the score to 4-3 in the bottom of the third inning, getting one run in both the second and third innings. Then the roof seemed to cave in on BYU as the Aztecs exploded for six straight runs in the next three innings before BYU was able to bring the SDSU bats to a stop in the seventh inning. By then the Aztecs owned an 11-3 lead, which seemed insurmountable.

The Cougars then took advantage of a swing in the momentum and scored eight runs of their own, finally tying the score when Murphy Sua ripped a double to right field which scored two runs. Vaughn Law grounded out to end the comeback and the five run inning.

The long ball proved to be the undoing of the Cougars as Aztec shortstop Bob Meecham pounded a homerun in the top of the ninth to lift SDSU to a one point lead.

The Cougars failed to score in the bottom of the ninth, getting three straight outs, and losing their second straight close game to the Aztecs.

San Diego State now travels to El Paso, Texas, for a series of league games with the Miners of UTEP. The Cougars host the University of Wyoming this weekend in their first home series in league play. Wyoming is an improved team from last season and could give the Cougars problems on their home field.

Super season for Cougar sports

By CARL HAUPT
Assistant Sports Editor

Many excellent sports photographs have been taken by Universe photographers this year which never made their way into the newspaper.

Thousands of pictures are taken every year and choosing from among them can be a difficult task. As Winter Semester comes to a close, the sports staff looks back on the 1978-79 year of sports at BYU and shows several photographs which were never printed but capture the emotions of a great year for Cougar athletics.

One of the best is a picture taken by Lyle Stavast moments after the Cougars' Danny Ainge sank two free throws to give BYU its first Western Athletic basketball championship since 1972. The victory gave BYU a 20 game winning season and an automatic berth in the Western Regionals of the NCAA tournament.

The Cougars' football team captured the conference title once again, and quarterback Marc Wilson, shown with Cosmo and reserve quarterback Mark Flammer, was one of the main cogs in the BYU football machine. Wilson will be back next season and will be tutored by Doug Scovil, who returned to BYU after spending one year with the Chicago Bears of the National Football League.

Steve Craig, the Cougars' third guard, is caught by Susan Gregg's camera as he goes high over Colorado State's Eddie Hughes for two points. Basketball fans at BYU still have two more years in which to enjoy Craig's talent.

The football season got off to a rocky start, as evidenced by the photograph of the Cougars' defensive team just barely missing a chance to block an Arizona State fieldgoal attempt, but the team came back to win the WAC.

Danny Ainge leaps into the arms of Steve Trumbo to celebrate BYU's victory over San Diego State, while Devin Durrant joins in the fun. The Cougars downed SDSU on two last minute freethrows by Ainge.

Three Cougars just miss blocking a fieldgoal attempt during the first game of the season against Arizona State. Although the game proved frustrating for BYU, the Cougars recovered from the loss and went on to become the 1978 WAC football champions.

Y women compete Saturday

Twelve women athletes from BYU will compete in a track meet at the University of Washington on April 14.

The dozen Cougar athletes are Laurie Armitage, Maria Luiza Betioli, Linda Bourn, Stella Edwinson, Vivian Estes, Maria Garcia, Pamla Happy, Heather Kuusela, Roz Rouse, Cindy Yahne, Thais Zambrzycki and Themis Zambrzycki. They will compete in 16 different events at the meet.

A childless couple receives adoption counseling from Karen Bauman of the Provo Division of Family Services. Because of a declining number of children being offered for adoption, and an increasing number of prospective parents, some couples have to wait as long as seven years for a child.

"Beyond this point," Ms. Uzelac said, "half the persons who attended the meeting never return or even complete the preliminaries."

For the half who carry through, she continued, a letter is sent to each of the four references listed asking questions about their relation to the adoptive applicants; the general atmosphere in the applicants' home; factors indicating the applicants are reliable and able to care for children; their best qualities and possible limitations as adoptive parents; and the ways this couple could give love and guidance necessary in rearing a child.

The final questions directed to the references is "Would you like to see a child in whom you are personally interested placed permanently in this home?"

Home study

During this time, the home study takes place. This consists of five interviews of two hours each. At least one of these takes place in the couple's home, Ms. Uzelac said.

It takes several months to complete a home study, said Ms. Bauman. "Applicants sometimes wait as long as four months before they're notified," she said.

As a result of these problems, this selection process can vary among agencies. Ms. Dicks said she requests initial information over the phone and often suggests that prospective parents look elsewhere if they do not meet her agency's basic requirements.

To be considered as adoptive parents for a newborn, there is an age limit of 40, most workers said. However, at the Children's Aid Society of Utah, the age limit is 32, and at the Children's Service Society, the age limit may soon drop to 35.

But while a person adopting an infant must be 40 or under, the adoptive parent of an older child can be 40 plus the age of the child, Ms. Uzelac said. For example, a 4-year-old could be adopted by someone 44 years of age.

Adoption workers at the private agencies point out that only the state has custody of older children, who, in most cases, are placed in foster homes because of abusive parents or other family difficulties. The majority are either returned to their natural parents or adopted by the foster families.

Still, all agencies deal with older children who have special problems such as physical handicaps or mental retardation, and these children urgently need homes.

Social workers agree that adoptive parents must have been married a minimum of two years. Some private agencies require a minimum of three years as a sign of stability. "A family needs to be secure in the marriage relationship," Ms. Bauman said.

Other factors the agencies consider are health, finances, and qualifications such as race, geographical area, family resemblance, the expectations of the natural parents and the expectations of the adoptive parents.

Family resemblance

Ms. Dicks said appearance is not that important: "Children are natural mimics and environment is a great teacher. It always surprises me how a child takes on the characteristics of the family. You'd think it was a natural child."

But Ms. Flowers said, "Family resemblance is valid. I wouldn't put a child that comes from Scandinavian six-footers with a family where no one's over five feet, three inches."

Ms. Uzelac agrees: "We don't match hair, and eye color — unless parents specifically request it — but we do try to match size."

Of course, the most important consideration in the adoption process is the quality of the home. Home studies, Ms. Bauman said, "deal with reasons and motivations for adopting, and attitudes toward child raising."

Through interviews with the prospective parents, social workers learn about such things as the parents' prejudices and beliefs, attitudes toward illegitimacy, methods of discipline, parenting skills, capacity for love, and moral character.

At the conclusion of the study, if the parents are approved, they are placed on an official waiting list. The study is kept up-to-date with annual evaluations, so that when a child is available, "We have current information on which to base a decision," Ms. Uzelac said.

Every time there is a child to place, said the social workers, a committee consisting of the social worker, adoption supervisor and a specialist make a joint decision on where the child is to go. "We try to be fair," said Ms. Flowers. "We don't take names from the top of the list, but pick the couples eligible for each particular child, perhaps as many as 10 or 20. The files are then presented to the committee and a decision reached."

Consequently, a couple waiting only one year can have precedence over one that has waited longer.

No crystal ball

Mary Lines, specialist over adoptions for the Division of Family Services, said, "Understand what an awesome task it is to make these decisions without a crystal ball, decisions that affect lifetimes and generations." And, she added, "It's hard to not get caught up solely in the interests of the parents because they're the ones we work with."

Ms. Bauman emphasized, "The whole crux of the matter is we must think of the child first, what is best for him. We are not here to find children for parents, but to find parents for children."

When the committee has come to a mutual agreement, the child is placed in the home for a "preparation period" of six months to a year, during which time visits are made by the social workers every month to check progress. Any time after the six-month mark, Ms. Dicks said, the parents can legally adopt.

When the adoption is legal, a new birth certificate is made with the adoptive parents' names written in as the parents. Two copies are made. One is given to the new parents, one filed in the state Bureau of Vital Statistics. A record of the transaction is kept in a locked file at the agency. Then, at last, the process is complete and another child has found a home.

...here's an opening there, there's a ... light," Rockefeller said in an ...rview.

...e warned that the nation should ...expect coal to provide a quick solu... ...tion to inflation, which is in part caused by oil imports.

"Coal is just part of the answer," he said.

Rockefeller has been skeptical of previous presidential declarations for coal. He has attacked the White House for lacking a coherent national energy policy.

Although a boom was predicted for the coal industry at the end of a winter-long strike by the United Mine Workers in 1977-78, thousands of Appalachian miners have been idled because of a slow market for coal.

Rockefeller said that despite the clamor for alternatives to imported oil, the coal industry is producing more coal than the nation is demanding.

He said if there is a commitment to an immediate expansion of coal use there are two possible ways to provide a quick spurt in consumption — by having utilities with oil-fired generators purchase power from coal-fired plants and by mixing coal with oil to form a "slurry" fuel.

But the governor warned that coal is not a quick solution.

"If you're talking about coal, you're talking about three or four years to open a new mine," Rockefeller said.

And, he said, expanded coal use must be reconciled with environmental concerns, such as air and water pollution.

Young Ambassadors 'good experience'

By SUSANNE MEILSOE
Universe Staff Writer

Put together music, dance, showmanship, smiling people, missionary work and much more, and you have the BYU Young Ambassadors.

Young Ambassadors — a magic word that for many students sounds like an impossible dream, is a musical performing group designed to take the message of love and brotherhood to people.

Each year more than 800 BYU students go through the stress and hassle of auditioning to be a member of the well-known performing group.

One might ask the question, why? What is it about the Young Ambassadors that attracts so many people?

The Universe has looked into the group and interviewed those involved, from singers and dancers to technical crew and band members — not to forget the directors.

Amy Baer, a sophomore majoring in business from Bountiful, Utah, said:

"Young Ambassadors gives me the chance to be the person I enjoy being. It's the person who is happy, friendly, enthusiastic in sharing the gospel and loving life."

"Young Ambassadors isn't an ego trip, or at least it shouldn't be. It's a chance to develop into the best person you can possibly become," Miss Baer said.

The vote is unanimous. Everybody in the group said, in effect, "It's like a dream come true." No one could really believe that they actually made the final call-back. The pressure was so big, and the frustrations were many, they all agreed.

Paula Last, a dancer from Hurricane, Utah, told the following experience from the days she tried out.

"I had been out of town and I was coming home to see if I had made the call-back. It was late at night and as I was coming up to the Social Hall a security officer was locking up the building. I just begged him to let me in so I could see if I was on the list. So I ran in there, grabbed the list and read the names in the street light, and when I found my name on the list, I was just so happy that I threw my arms around the security man."

One of the pressures for Linda Neuffer, a singer in the group from Columbia, Mont., was after the selections had been made and the group was together for the first time.

"Everybody was so quiet. It was very weird. It was as if everybody said, 'what am I doing here?' and now these people are just my best friends."

"Picking the approximately 35 singers and dancers needed for the two groups out of the 800 trying out is not an easy job," Val Lindsey, artistic director for the international group, said.

He said that the people in the groups have to be so well prepared, not only professionally, but also spiritually.

"If their testimonies aren't strong, they aren't going to pass on the message to everybody," Lindsey said.

Bob Murri, from Idaho Falls, said that he knew the picking of the groups members wasn't political, as many people seem to think.

"Val is a very spiritual leader," Murri said. "I think we're picked because we're meant to be picked."

Chris Davenport, a singer from Idaho Falls, added, "I don't think that anybody had any idea of what they were getting into. We didn't know how much missionary work this was."

Lindsey said that every member of the group is asked to get up in the morning and study the scriptures and to develop a close relationship with our Heavenly Father.

"Our kids are different; they stand out in a crowd," Lindsey said.

"The neatest thing is not to glorify ourselves, but to spread the gospel," said Isaac Thomas, a dancer from Kansas City, Mont.

Arlen Wilcock said that at first being in the group was an ego trip for him.

"But I soon learned the real purpose of the group — missionary work," Wilcock said.

Amy Baer said, "The missionary opportunities are many and it is such a wonderful feeling to know that we, in our own way, are contributing to the expansion of the church."

The Young Ambassadors put new meaning into the word sacrifice. Each week many hours are spend in rehearsals, dance and language classes, firesides put on by the group, and concerts.

"The neatest thing about the Young Ambassadors is not to glorify one's self," says Isaac Thomas, "but to spread the gospel." The Young Ambassadors has gone on several international tours and is one of the most popular of the BYU performing groups.

Brad Williams, a singer from Olympia, Wash., said:

"When you get into this group you have to say 'forget everything,' and really work for the purpose of the group. You have got to really control yourself, and realize that the small things count too. Things like being at rehearsals on time.

"You've got to be a person that is willing to work as hard as you can. You've got to be able to fit right in," Williams added.

Grades and many rehearsing hours are not the only problems of members of the group, according to Virginia Nelson, a lighting technician. She added that one's social life is affected.

"You spend so much time with rehearsals, and then performances on the weekend. You really do miss out on a lot of activities. Some guys just don't enjoy having to plan their social life around your performance schedule," Miss Nelson said.

Aside from that, each member needs about $1,000 to cover expenses.

"I work 25 hours a week, and we just try to come up with the money in whatever way we can," said Dave Jarvis, from from Salem, Ore.

Despite the many hours of hard work and the many activities missed, every member of the group agrees that it is all worth it.

"You can be in a top singing group, but it probably doesn't have the spirit we feel, and it's not the same," Brad Williams said.

"People can feel this unity we have when we are performing on the stage. We are like one big happy family," Bob Murri said.

"We are all very close," said Kent Hakari.

He said that when he went home for Christmas he just missed everybody so bad that he had to call some on the phone just to see how they were doing and what they got for Christmas.

"I remember the first rehearsal in the beginning of the year," Lindsey said. "I told the members of my group the following: I want you to look at everybody here. Your relationship with these people will grow so strong, and you will never look at these people through so empty eyes as you do now."

Although close relationships develop, there isn't a lot of dating within the group.

"There is not very much dating going on in the group," Brad Wiliams said, "But it does happen, of course."

Williams said the group has a rule called no P.D.A. This means no public display of affection.

"Some people think we get tired of each other," said Lori Cross, a dancer from Salt Lake City, "but we don't."

Each year the Young Ambassadors go on a least two tours. The international group just recently returned from the mid-semester tour to California.

Lindsey said the bus rides are long and tiring and often the performers have to set up three and four concerts on the same day.

"This year we a had a lot of activities on the bus and we had many little awards we gave out," she said. "For example, the Super Soppy Socker award was given to the person managing to make the most mistakes during the past show."

Among the stories they told was one about two girls in the group falling over one of the mike cords right on stage.

Being a Young Ambassador means always being your best, always representing the church and spreading the gospel.

In his opening address of the 1978-79 school year President Oaks said, in telling the entire studentbody about the Young Ambassadors:

"Our students were responsible, as the Psalmist said, to 'sing the Lord's song in a strange land.' But that could only be accomplished — that beautiful feeling could only be communicated — by those who had spent many months of grueling work to bring their program to a professional level, and who were willing, unselfishly and cheerfully, to give many, many days in the exhausting routine of performance after performance. More than that, they had to work together harmoniously and to live in tune with the spirit so that they can be an instrument of our Heavenly Father in communicating His spirit."

As one member said, "It's a great foundation for later life. It's a lot of work, but it's all worth it."

Highcliffe Manor

NBC presents zany new series

LOS ANGELES (AP) - NBC, that giant supermarket of TV shows, has restocked its schedule yet again. This week's specials: a revamped "Supertrain" and a pair of debut series called "Whodunnit?" and "Highcliffe Manor."

Following a tradition NBC established in its several miniseasons this year, most of the new shows in the spring season were unavailable for early preview. But "Highcliffe Manor" was. It was a fortunate circumstance.

This is a gothic sitcom about a mansion full of looney scientists. Its aim is absurdity, its humor off-the-wall. The loose structure of the story goes something like this:

One Berkeley Blacke, founder of an island hideaway thinktank, has passed on from this world, leaving his foundation in the hands of his cute and naive widow, Shelley Fabares. This foils the plans of the resident scientists, who'd wanted control of the foundation so they could implement their plan to clone the world's leaders.

It's a tongue-in-cheek spoof, a parody of bad guys and sweet widows and sitcoms themselves. It doesn't try to present even a thread of plausibility, which allows for fuller enjoyment of the crazy humor. And these folks are nutso.

Elder Harper (played by Matt Stevens), left, talks with Elder Arnold (played by Tracy Merrill) in the Alhambra Theater's production of Elders and Sisters.

'Elders and Sisters' a winner

By DOUG SMITH
Universe Reviewer

Elders and Sisters, the first production at Pleasant Grove's Alhambra Theater, is a winner.

The musical is based on the book by Gladys Clark Farmer and was adapted for the stage by Orson Scott Card and Dallan Pack.

It is the story of six missionaries, the joys and frustrations they experience on the road to "the best years of their lives." If you have ever wondered what it would be like to be on a mission, or if you would like to recount many fond memories of your mission life, you must see Elders and Sisters.

The musical starts out with an overly enthusiastic "green" missionary, Elder Harper, played by Matt Stevens, who arrives in France to start his mission. Elder Harper tries to convert the French customs officer (Larry Nelson) but his efforts are in vain because the experienced Frenchman explains to the elder that he has seen many missionaries come and go and would the kind elder please, "...not try to convert me."

The musical moves from the funny, frustrating non-member contact incidents to the aggravating, touching moments that missionary companions experience. It is laced with the many encounters elders and sisters are faced with, and the problems a missionary faces in a new area. Included in the many musical arrangements is the ever-so-present "Dear John" letter; the "What am I doing Here?" attitude; and "I hate my mission area" feeling.

The production concludes at BYU where Elder Harper and Sister Palmer (Delpha Card) meet after their mission, refall in love and get married.

Overall, the musical is a good experience. The high spots of the production are many and varied, one particular audience favorite being the performance of Linda Williams as Sister Davis, the stereotype sister missionary. And if their is a low ebb in the musical it has to be the singing of Bret Liljenquist as Jerry Burns, the BYU roommate of the returned missionary Harper. But one almost overlooks the poor performance by the funniness of the message of Liljenquist's song.

The overall musical may not be par with a Broadway production but it is surprisingly funny and entertaining.

Elders and Sisters will be presented at the Alhambra Theater in Pleasant Grove every Monday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday through May 5.

Final Examination Schedule for Winter Semester 1979

Instructors are required to give a final examination for each class according to the schedule which is printed below. (Any exceptions must receive written approval from the Academic Vice-President's Office.)

Students are expected to be at the examination. Early final examinations are not to be given students unless written permission has been granted by the Exception to University Policy Committee and by the individual instructor. (Students petitioning an early final examination may pick up a form in the Records Office, B-150 ASB.) If extenuating circumstances arise so that the student cannot attend the final examination, the instructor may give an incomplete grade, permitting the student to take the examination after the semester. (If a student does not contact the instructor about missing the final examination or if an agreement is not made for giving an incomplete, the instructor should submit a final grade computing the weight of the final examination as an "E."

In cases where students have conflicting examinations or more than three examinations in one day, individual arrangements for alternative test times may be made by the instructor. Examinations will be held on April 14, 16, 17, and 18, with the dead day on Friday, April 13, 1979; therefore, April 12 will be the last day of instruction.

The specific examination schedule is as follows:

Mad Hatter professor loves teaching, travel

By DIANNA GREER
Universe Staff Writer

"He's a pool shark," comments one student. "He has cute yellow pajamas," says another. "He's the maddest Mad Hatter I've ever known . . . he's a world traveler whose Spanish is thickly iced with an Idaho accent. . . he's a teacher who really cares about people, and even if he flunks you, you know that he loves you."

Who is he? A bird? A plane? No, he's "Hud," Dr. Lloyd Hudman, professor of geography, and a favorite of many BYU students.

"My mother told me I was born with itchy feet," says Hudman. Through his service in the Air Force, and travel with his wife and family, Hudman has spent the equivalent of four years in Europe, including six weeks in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, six months in the Pacific, and a great deal of time touring the USA, Canada and Mexico.

Touring

This spring he and his wife, Claire Ann, will spend a month in Europe with 45 BYU students on a tour with the Travel and Tourism Club. "There are 43 girls and only two guys going on the trip," says Hudman. "You can just imagine all the hair dryers that will be going at once in the youth hostels."

This will not be the first of this type of experience for the Hudmans. In 1978, Hudman served as the assistant director for the BYU Study Abroad program in Madrid, Spain. He taught European Studies classes, while his wife studied genealogy.

"In Spain, the Hudmans, who have four daughters and four grandchildren, became 'Mama and Papa Hud' to the members of our group," says Debbie Jenson of Bonita, Calif.

"Once for European Studies class Hud assigned us to visit little towns outside of Madrid to see how the people lived, and get a feel for small town life in Spain," recalls Caren Renz of Covina, Calif.

"He accompanied our group, so at the train station we picked a little town named "Las Infantales" and bought our tickets."

Miss Renz says Hudman was afraid the town would be too big for their purposes. "When the conductor announced we had arrived, we got off the train and looked around unbelievingly. It was doomsville. Population zero, with not even a bathroom. We all laughed so hard, that Hud started crying, and his head turned bright red."

Hat hunting

While traveling around the world, Hudman collects hats. His prized collection now totals over 20, ranging from a Spanish boina to a red Arab fez.

"I've always wanted a mink fur hat from Russia," he says, "but they cost about $90, so I decided not to buy one."

Hudman has had many interesting experiences in his travels. He tells of a time in Mexico when they stayed at the "Hotel Torquesa," on a beautiful beach. "The area was gorgeous. The rooms had 40-foot high ceilings, but they were crawling with cockroaches, and we had to chase dogs and cats out of them."

He says they slept on straw mattresses on the cement, and had shrimp cooked whole, including the legs, for dinner.

A native Idahoan, Hudman received his bachelor's degree in psychology-sociology from the University of Utah.

After teaching fourth grade for three years in Salt Lake City, he and Mrs. Hudman went to the University of Kansas where he completed a Ph.D. in geography in 1970. He is currently teaching geography and travel and tourism here at BYU.

"As a teacher, Hudman goes out of his way to be complete and make sure you understand," says Ricardo Pelo of Orem. "He always applies things, and takes the time to give details and really explain."

Miss Jenson says he really emphasizes getting an education, "a real learning education rather than just a degree."

People watching

To Hudman, geography is not just places, it's people. He says people really prick his curiosity. "I love to watch them."

Hudman is particulary interested in the effects of tourism. He has written a text entitled "Introduction to Tourism," and two other books, "Travel Patterns in America," and "Tourism: A Shrinking World."

He recently gave a paper on "how to analyze impact on tourism" at an international symposium in Washington, D.C. He plans a trip to Japan and the South Pacific for two months during the summer of 1980, where he will study the impact of tourism on developing economies.

Besides research, Hudman says he enjoys traveling, being with people and teaching. "Sometimes I get so excited for class to start I can hardly stand it," he said. "I feel really lucky to be getting paid to do the things I love to do."

Student employment available on campus

Now is an excellent time to apply for student employment on campus for spring and summer terms, said Lura Pospical, supervisor of student employment.

"Currently, there are a great variety of job possibilities, ranging from utilizing skills in carpentry, electrical, mechanical, computer, automobile and air conditioning skills to artists, translators, English majors, camera operators, printers, and delivery," Miss Pospical said.

For those with good secretarial skills, there are plenty of immediate openings. There is an urgent need for qualified candidates.

However, to hold one of these jobs, a student must take at least one class during the current term to qualify. Part-time and full time openings are available.

For those who need a summer job, openings are available with food services and the grounds and cu[l]. services. These areas need hund[s] students, who will be able t[o] part-time or full-time during [the] and summer terms.

It is not necessary to be a reg[ular] student during spring and su[m]. terms to work in these areas. "A[ny] who will be a full-time stude[nt] semester is eligible to apply fo[r] openings," Miss Pospical said. Se[ve] freshmen, who will be attendin[g] for the first time in the fall, can [al]. for these jobs.

There will be a large turnover [of] at the end of the semester. TH[e] ployment office is in need of pe[o]. work during semester break. "E[ven] they want to work temporarily li[ke] break they are needed," Miss Pos[ital] said.

For spring and for summer em[plo]. ment, apply with Student Em[plo]. ment as soon as possible in C-45[3] between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Soviet short story writer to speak as part of tou[r]

Yuri Nagibin, an author who is considered to be the Ernest Hemingway of the Soviet Union, will speak today at 10 a.m. in A104 JKB.

Nagibin is the most popular living short story writer in the Soviet Union, said Dr. Donald K. Jarvis, chairman of the BYU Department of Asian and Slavic Languages. The writer is on a 15-university tour of the United States.

Nagibin, born in 1920 in Moscow to an educated family, has written of his front-line experiences in World War II, outdoor adventure, ecology, the psychology of love, and childhood.

His current interest is in biographies of courageous but little known figures in history, Jarvis said. In his s[tories] Nagibin uses nature as the medi[um] testing and exposing human cha[r]

Nagibin's style has been sa[id] reflect the same disdain for po[p] themes, artistic restraint and [psy]chological sensitivity as au[thors] Chekov and Bunin. Like Hemin[gway] Nagibin displays a partiality fo[r] aminig characters in lonely situ[ations] where, near the limit of thei[r] durance and at the breaking [point] they must prove themselves.

The event is sponsored b[y the] Department of Asian and [Slavic] Languages and the Harold B[.] Library Forums.

Couple to attend Uruguay seminar

Dr. and Mrs. Lyman S. Shreeve of the BYU Spanish Department and Teacher Evaluation Services, respectively, have been invited to participate in a seminar in Uruguay being conducted by the U.S. International Communications Agency, formerly known as the U.S. Information Agency.

The Shreeves will leave Provo April 21 to visit Chile, Paraguay, Argentina and Brazil in addition to Uruguay.

The couple will be involved in a series of conferences and workshops in Montevideo, Uruguay, at the Binational Center, which is celebrating its 15th anniversary April 30-May 5. Dr. Shreeve was the center's first director and Mrs. Shreeve was the first director of courses.

The Shreeves opened three other binational centers —one in Chile and two in Mexico — while working 1960-65 for the U.S. govermnent agency. In 1964 they were assigned to obtain an old English school in Montevideo and make it into a binational center worthy of the U.S. government's full support.

Dr. Shreeve prepared the way for the laying of the cornerstone of the new building that now houses the Montevideo Binational Center and the Artigas-Washington Library also sponsored by the State Department.

For outstanding leadership "beyond the call of duty" and work in the Binational Center program, Dr. Shreeve received a Distinguished Meritorious Service Award from USIA director Edward R. Murrow.

Dr. Shreeve joined the BYU faculty in 1965, taking a one-year break to complete his Ph.D. degree at Interamerican University in Mexico in 1970. Presently, he is a professor of Spanish and former coordinator of the Latin American Studies program. He served as president of the Uruguay Mission for the LDS Church from 1951 to 1955 and had previously served a two-year mission to Argentina from 1936 to 1938.

Both native Arizonans, the Shreeves sold their home in Mesa after they had two children and both served a mission in Argentina, 1945-48.

For the past 14 years, Mrs. Shreeve has worked in the Teacher Evaluation Office, in which students evaluate their teachers.

Dr. Shreeve earned both his B.A. and M.A. degrees at BYU; Mrs. Shreeve earned her B.A. degree in Spanish at BYU in 1972. They have lived a total of 15 years in South America working for the Church and the U.S. government. During the winter semester of 1976, they directed the BYU Study Abroad program in Spain.

plane is traveling 60 miles an hour at an de of 5,000 feet. The door suddenly flies open, g nothing between Steve and the open air. His ctor commands him to swing out the doorway ang onto the wing strut, leaving his legs blowing d him. The instructor yells at him to let go and es, dropping immediately out of sight.

ss Stringham, the BYU skydiving club adviser, kydiving is more than just jumping from an air- . "It is a feeling of accomplishment. It's a hard, se feeling."

spite of the excitement, Miss Stringham said BYU students jump only once. "Many just afford to get involved in the sport and a lot of nts just go to say they have done it," she said. urse, many are just plain scared, she added.

those people who do jump, Miss Stringham parachuting offers more excitement today than in the past. "Five years ago they used round chutes, which did not have much uverability. Today we use square canopies provide for a lot of fun after the chute opens."

used to be all the fun was before the chute was d but with the square chutes we do all kinds of s after opening up," Miss Stringham said. Square chutes travel at three times the speed of round ones, about 20 to 30 miles an hour.

Miss Stringham said a maneuver called "canopy relation work" is the most commonly practiced after opening up the chute. Canopy relation work is when the skydivers stand on one another's parachutes as they glide to the earth.

"We have had 12 to 15 people locked up in a triangle before," she said. But the fancy square parachutes, which Miss Stringham said cost up to $800, are used only by the more advanced jumpers.

"Beginners jump with the round army parachutes. They are very safe and we have few problems with them," she said.

Miss Stringham explained the process involved in learning to skydive.

"Your first jump is from 3,000 feet and you are on a static line, which means the cord is pulled for you," she said. Miss Stringham said after five jumps a person is ready for a "pop and hop," which means pulling his own ripcord.

But the learning process does not stop there, she added. "Even after 100 jumps you are still learning."

What kind of person would skydive? Miss Stringham said just about any kind. "I saw a 75-year-old man jump once, but after one jump he decided he was too old to be jumping out of an airplane."

At 5,000 feet going 60 miles an hour with nothing underneath you but blue sky, it might be easy to feel old while still young. But that is part of what makes skydiving the exciting sport that it is.

Reception tips given for campus couples

By CHERYL GILLAM
Universe Staff Writer

As the semester comes to a close, thoughts are not focused only on dreaded finals. Starry-eyed females with engagement rings glittering in the sun seem to multiply as the weather gets warmer.

"We have really been busy recently, I think it is for the June or early spring weddings," said Betty Smith, a sales clerk at Penney's department store.

"We have sold a lot of wedding gowns every month since I have been here in August," said Louise Fox, bridal consultant for ZCMI at the University Mall.

The county clerk's office reports a high percentage of BYU students receiving marriage licenses during April and August, said Mrs. Veri Gates, county elections supervisor.

"We will receive about 300 applications for marriage licenses in April," she said.

Couples planning weddings might do well to consider the following tips:

Before thinking about the "wonder of it all," start calculating the cost of the wedding reception. Unless you have a Swiss bank account or are related to the Rockefellers, it would be wise to not be flamboyant. An average small wedding reception will cost about $600.

Florists, catering companies, photographers and bridal shops are more than happy to tell about their products. Comparing prices with the quality of the product is essential. A package deal is not a money saver if parts of it are not quality.

There are approximately 15 florists, 20 caterers, 35 photography studios, and six bridal shops listed in the phone book for the Provo-Orem area. To help narrow down your running around for a "good bargain," ask those you know who were recently married whom they chose to do their wedding reception and whether it was satisfactory.

Then go see the merchandise for yourself. Ask a lot of questions about it. The merchants will be thrilled to give you all the intimate details.

Be cautious of "money savers" offered by bridal merchants. If you have to spend $200 more to save $50 it is not a "money saver."

Plan the amount of guests you will invite and then stick to it. Don't be talked into a fancier wedding reception than you can easily afford. There is no need to be in debt for years over your wedding reception costs.

Award given food services

The Food Systems Administration program at BYU will receive a $1,000 scholarship today from Lavar Dickman of Booth Fisheries.

Dickman is a branch manager of Booth Fisheries in Salt Lake City. He will present the scholarship to Food Science and Nutrition Department dean, Blaine Porter.

The program was started in September, said Ed Sanders, of the department, and is part of the Food Science and Nutrition Departments course offerings. The program is designed to prepare people for hotel and restaurant management. The course offers degrees at the bachelor level as well as at the masters level, Sanders said.

Because this training program within the department is new, the scholarship will help in supporting students who enter the field, Sanders said.

Students get certificates

Students of the Rocky Mountain Gerontology Center received certificates Wednesday for graduate and undergraduate work done on aging.

There were 79 students who received the certificates at the awards ceremony, in the Wilkinson Center Wednesday night. The students came from the five universities affiliated with the Center, Utah State, University of Utah, Weber State, Southern Utah College and BYU.

The Gerontology Center trains students in working with the elderly and at BYU a course of varied classes and service work is available.

Daily Universe to battle ASBYU with tug-of-war

The Daily Universe and the ASBYU Executive Council will finally square off face-to-face today at 10 a.m. in a tug-of-war match at the last Record Racket of the year in the Memorial Lounge, ELWC.

Bill Athey, Record Racket chairman, calls the event "All Challenge Day" and invites students to go for records in competitions ranging from situps to bubble gum blowing balloon tossing.

Athey said KBYU television will be covering the event. "It's the last chance for students to set BYU records," Athey said. "All the record holders will be listed in this year's ASBYU history."

If Record Racket is continued next year, the event might be held at halftimes of Cougar football and basketball games, to encourage more student participation.

Students awarded graduate fellowships

Two BYU students have been awarded fellowships for graduate study for the National Science Foundation.

Dr. Perry T. Larsen, BYU coordinator of research develpment, said Alan K. Harrison, a physics theory major from Provo, and Whitney K. Newey, an economics major also from Provo, were each awarded $3,900 per year for full-time study at the university of their choice. The fellowships are good for three years of graduate work.

Nahan Kassack, public relations official for the National Science Foundaion, said more than 3,750 of the nation's brightest students competed for the fellowships, and only 450 were awarded. The awards were given solely on the basis of merit.

Both Newey and Harrisom have been straight 'A' students most of their lives. Harrison has co-authored 11 scientific papers with Dr. Harvey Fletcher. Newey has been vice president of BYU's chapter of Omicron Delta Epsilon, the national society of economists. Both students have been involved in research in their individual departments, and both are returned missionaries.

Only three students from Utah received fellowships. A student from the University of Utah received the other one.

Funds to be matched

Funds raised by Student Development, a BYU student fund-raising program, will be matched dollar for dollar by a Wyoming man, according to Donald T. Nelson, director of the LDS Development Office.

"Carl K. Robinson's generous offer will inspire students to dig a little deeper into their pockets and lend their financial support to the university," Nelson said.

BYU students who haven't made a financial contribution this year will be solicited through the mail and asked to donate, Nelson said.

Robinson is a banker with six children, all of whom have attended BYU. Five are BYU graduates. He has been active in the Boy Scout program and has received numerous Scouting awards.

Including the $25,000 matching gift offer, Robinson has contributed $75,000 within the past seven years to BYU and its programs.

ASBYU court to close soon

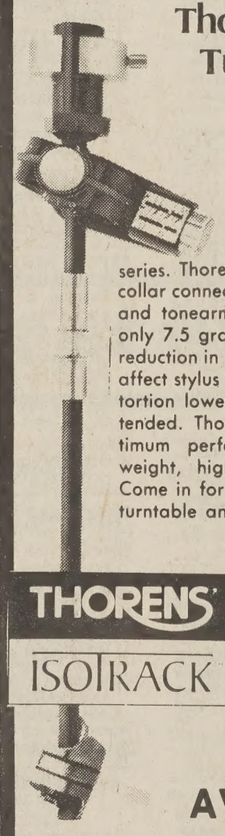
Remember the plug-in-shell?
Thorens Isotrack Series Turntables proudly introduce the Plug-In Arm.



Thorens introduces an exciting new tonearm design to complement its new manual turntable series. Thorens eliminated the headshell and its collar connection by incorporating the headshell and tonearm rod in a straight tubular design only 7.5 grams in effective tonearm mass. This reduction in mass reduces the inertial forces that affect stylus pressure. Tracking is improved, distortion lowered and stylus and record life extended. Thorens Isotrack tonearm assures optimum performance with the newest, light weight, high compliance pick-up cartridges. Come in for a demonstration of this advanced turntable and unique Plug-in-Arm.
